Ask HN: How do you deal with "friends" who don't pay? - bdfh42 I have had several run ins with people who say they are going to pay some day or another but don't... until a month or so has past.It seems to be a cultural feature of the US - you have to be very discreet about money, as much as you like it or not. The subtext is you must be living a good life to 'deserve' to have money coming in.- Is this a normal pattern? - How do you deal with this? - Do you get an impression that they want to get the money? - Do you just nip out of an awkward conversation? - Is there anything you could say to address the situation? - How do you know that they will pay? ===== satyrnein I think in a lot of cases people don't want to feel like they are admitting they need help. When I am trying to pay a bill I like to say "oh, I can't pay this right now but how about $x". If they balk at it then they probably don't want me to have that money in the first place. I assume you mean 'friend' instead of 'partner', don't 'friend' make you pay for stuff too? ----- saluki They don't want to be friends with you. The best way to deal with it might be to simply stop trying to have that kind of relationship. You don't need to pay
